1. A report on the Soviet Third Infantry Division, which was the Thirteenth Infantry Brigade from the end of World War II until early 1951.

50X1-HUM

2. The report deals briefly with the organization, location, and make-up of the division from World War II until its transfer to Klaipeda, Lithuanian SSR, in late 1951. Although the division was still believed to be in Klaipeda in 1956, the major emphasis in the report is on the composition and weapons of the division in 1952.

SUBJECT: The Third Infantry Division in Klaypeda

1. The Third Infantry Division (3 Gvardeyskaya Strelkovaya Divizia) was organized in Sverdlovsk during World War II. It was in action on the Stalingrad front and was regarded as a very strong, efficient fighting unit. Immediately after the war, the division was reorganized as the Thirteenth Infantry Brigade (13 Gvardeyska Brigada); thirteen had been the number of one of its regiments.
2. The Thirteenth Infantry Brigade was composed of three infantry battalions, one artillery regiment, one independent signals company, and one independent engineers company. The brigade was stationed in Opochka [N56-42, E28-43], in the Velikoluksaya Oblast, until early 1951. In early 1951, the brigade was again converted into a division, designated as before, the Third Infantry Division.

3. The Third Infantry Division was transferred to Klaypeda in late 1951. During summer, it was stationed in a camp (letniy lager) located about 5 kilometers south of the town, opposite Kurskaya Kosa, while in winter, the units of the division were stationed in Klaypeda and other towns. The camp covered an area of 1 x 2 kilometers and was traversed by the Klaypedskiy Canal. During the first years after the war, the 71st Infantry Division (71 Gvardeyskaya Strelkovaya Divizia) had been accommodated at the camp. The Third Infantry Division was reportedly¹ still stationed in Klaypeda in 1956.
4. The Third Infantry Division, with headquarters in Klaypeda, comprised the following units:
 - a. The Thirteenth Infantry Regiment (13 Strelkoviy Polk), stationed in Plunge [N55-55, E21-51].
 - b. Two additional infantry regiments (no details).
 - c. The Ninth Artillery Regiment (9 Art. Polk), stationed in Telshyay [N55-59, E22-16].
